this is something from a few weeks ago and lacks specific examples as a backup (like the opening to Asia, engagement with Myanmar, leading on Libya, cease-fire in Middle East, etc.), but is one way to try to capture the sweep of what she's done:

"Hillary Clinton helped lead a restoration of America's image and influence in the world.

She transformed American foreign policy with smart power, emphasizing innovative partnerships with people and institutions and embracing new technology to advance our age-old values.

By linking diplomacy, development and defense, she helped increase our security.

By being a champion for American businesses and workers, she helped open markets abroad and grow the economy at home.

And by shining a light on the potential of girls and women to contribute to the cause of peace and prosperity, Hillary Clinton helped make the goal of full participation a fundamental element of our national interest.

Thanks to Hillary Clinton, America is safer and stronger at home, more respected around the world, and a champion for all who seek to use their God-given potential in the pursuit of happiness, whoever they are and wherever they live."

Kiki - + pir and jake for points on her legacy and other thoughts.

I want to get to a point where people always make three clear crisp points about her legacy with discipline so it begins to become a true mantra.

Beginning with she restored America's leadership around the world. And continuing.

I asked jake to write a user friendly set of three high level points that can be backed up each w/ 3 ready examples if the speaker is asked why s/he says each one of these three top lines so he may send that to you today. Or not if he doesn't have time or we are still working it through.

I also want a way for people to speak organically to themselves on the will she/should she run question so it is not an organized surrogate line but instead a reflection of the individual speaking for themselves and not her. PIR has thoughts on this.

Thanks as always for flagging the opportunity with your appearance.
